NYC Elder Abuse Center (NYCEAC) was launched to provide NYC's professionals with the information and tools they need to effectively assist victims. It accomplishes this through an unprecedented level of collaboration and coordination: NYCEAC, a partnership of NYC's government and non-profit agencies, provide a streamlined and rapid response to elder abuse cases. The depth and breadth of expertise and resources of the participating agencies reduces fragmentation of systems and minimizes gaps or overlap of services. Additionally, NYCEAC provides in-service training to professionals across disciplines and systems, educates professionals through its eNewsletter and other social media platforms on elder justice issues pertinent to practice, provides technical assistance to other localities interested in developing collaborative models, educates key decision-makers and elected officials about elder abuse and seeks to improve legislation to better protect the safety and well-being of older adults.
